The screenshot shows a digital reading test interface. At the top, a header bar displays 'Questions: 1 - 7', '0% High School ELA Practice Test', and 'GUEST SESSION'. Below the header is a toolbar with icons for 'Back', 'Next', 'Save', and 'Pause'. On the right side of the toolbar, there are icons for 'Full Screen Reader', 'Zoom Out', and 'Zoom In'. A red circle highlights the 'Full Screen Reader' icon. In the center of the interface, there is a navigation bar with a hamburger menu icon, left and right arrow icons, and a question number '1'. A red circle highlights the left arrow icon, and another red circle highlights the right arrow icon. The main content area displays a reading passage titled 'Moving to the Back of Beyond'. The passage describes a family moving to a new home in California. The text is split into two columns. The first column contains the first paragraph, and the second column contains the second and third paragraphs. The passage ends with the sentence: 'On my first walk around the property, I saw two horned toads, a red-tailed hawk, and some deer tracks. I wondered what else I might find deeper and higher in the canyon. Dad'.

Moving to the Back of Beyond

When my parents said the three of us were moving out to California, to a place just north of Los Angeles, my mind immediately went to thoughts of Disneyland and Hollywood, glitz and glamour. I imagined a Rodeo Drive shopping spree to pick out a bikini for the endless days I would be spending on the beach. However, I'd forgotten about my parents' penchant for the unconventional; they're definitely "the road less traveled" kind of people. Mom had a gopher snake for a pet when she was younger, and Dad was never happier than when he was climbing near-vertical cliffs that only mountain goats could love. These are not city folk.

They had chosen to buy a 900-square-foot cabin under a 250-year-old oak tree in the high chaparral¹ forest out in

The reader can conclude that the narrator is open to living at "the back of beyond" and accepts her new life there. Click three sentences that best support this conclusion.

Our new home consisted of one bedroom, one bathroom, and one big room for everything else. A fireplace in the corner of the big room would be our sole source of heat in the winter. A swamp box (cooler) would blow a breeze over a big damp pad to keep us cool all summer, or so my father said. But it was early autumn that day, and the temperature was perfect in the shade of the oak tree. Our oak tree, I thought; I was settling in.

Mom wiped a layer of grime off the kitchen counter and muttered about getting a bottle of bleach on our next trip into town. That was the beginning of an important lesson about living in the back of beyond: you don't just zip over to the local convenience store anytime you need something out here. You have to make a careful list and check it twice so that you don't forget anything, because anywhere is a long way from here.

On my first walk around the property, I saw two horned toads, a red-tailed hawk, and some deer tracks. I wondered what else I might find deeper and higher in the canyon. Dad
